Dallas Congressman Bruce Alger verbally ripped the Kennedy administration for "aiding and abetting the enemy" before nearly 700 persons attending Wednesday testimonial luncheon given in his honor.

After the acknowledgment of congratulatory telegrams from top national Republicans, including Sen. Barry Goldwater, Sen. John Tower, and National Chairman William E. Miller, Alger expanded on a stream of issues—both internal and external.

On the domestic scene, Alger blasted at "socialists who surround our president" and pointed the finger at "Arthur Schlesinger Jr., Professor Kenneth Galbraith and Chester Bowles."

Alger called for "a return to fiscal saneness" and condemned federal aid to education and legislation covering medical care for the aged. He said the Dallas area was not likely to lose defense contracts because it was "not a political matter generally, but based on merit."

On other subjects, the Congressman praised the efforts of the National Indignation Convention, and he said that communication lines—controlled by the Central Intelligence Agency—which provide for national de-

"infiltrated Moscow," overrunning agriculture products to Yugoslavia by this action were "not for sale, but an outright gift." And payment for the products was placed in Yugoslavia, where the United States could not touch it and later would be used for Yugoslavia's own programs.

"This is not going to fall well with Khrushchev," Alger warned. Alger predicted the next Congress would continue to happen privately, foreign and United States, eight to 10 billion dollars a year. He also foreseen a congressional fight over trade and tariff legislation, and said the U.S. must "pricing itself out of world trade."

"We must elect a conservative Congress next fall and a conservative president two years hence," Alger concluded.

Charging an "apologetic" foreign policy, Alger said this country "engineered" the admission of Communist Mongolia to the United Nations, and also arranged the coup that put Communists in control of British Guiana. "We have sent hundreds of millions of dollars in aid to the U.A.R. (United Arab Republic) when they are closing down their free enterprise system," he said. Alger also said the United States is shipping food and supplies to Cuba through the United Nations.
